The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: Meyer et al. discloses an electron transmissive window, comprising:

a substrate having a window aperture formed therethrough;

a grid comprising a first material formed of ribs overlying said window aperture; and a window layer comprising a second material supported on said ribs, extending therebetween, and exposed on a first side to said window aperture and on a second side opposite said window aperture, but the even though the window layer is made of silicon nitride, one of the materials used in the window disclosed and claimed in the instant application, the patent teaches to make this layer about 3000 thick, 300 to 1500 times thicker than the thickness claimed in the instant application. Feldman et al. and Kelly also disclose electron transmissive windows made of silicon nitride (Feldman et al. actually suggests the use of the Kelly window at lines 11-13 in column 6), but Kelly explicitly teaches at lines 33-58 in column 8 that the window must be at least 200 angstroms (20 nm) thick, more preferably at least 0.1 micrometers (100 nm) thick in order to "provide a pinhole-free, substantially impermeable membrane and to provide sufficient structural strength to enable the membrane to withstand stresses encountered in service."

Schneiker et al. does disclose an electron transmissive window (12) having a thickness of from 1 to about 50 nm (see paragraph [0056]), but this window must have a diameter on the order of the diameter of the carbon nanotube (32) used as an emission tip, about 0.3 to 10 nm. It would not be physically possible to provide a grid across this aperture to support the electron transmissive layer. It would therefore not have been obvious to a person having ordinary skill in the art to use an electron transmissive window having both the thickness taught by Schneiker et al. and the grid support structure taught by Meyer et al.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
